fear) a second chance. So, the minute you believe a stalker has come into your life, start to document every event as it unfolds. Think of yourself as a court reporter—everything this individual does must be chronicled. (We suggest you keep your records in a log or diary format, similar to the one illustrated in Figure 8. This is an example of the Westminster Police Department’s victim stalking log.) Recently we had a two-day preliminary hearing on an AS who stalked a woman over the past eleven years. Due to the circumstances of the case, if this victim hadn’t kept good records, both her testimony and our investigation would have been greatly hindered. As it was, the stalker was bound over (remanded) for trial in superior court on all felony charges. He later pled guilty to felony stalking, served about four months in jail, and was placed on probation, which he continued to violate, each time going back to jail for longer and longer periods of time.

Keep the information you gather on your stalker in a safe place. If possible, make copies and leave a copy in another location. Remember, some stalkers will enter their victim’s house and/or car, and they have been known to steal the documentation you have accumulated.

As much as possible, corroborate this documentation with eyewitness accounts or photographs. Go out and buy a disposable camera and keep it with you at all times. Then, when you are confronted by your stalker, take a snapshot, trying to get some type of landmark in the photo as well. Taking a picture is advisable for two reasons. First, there will often be no witnesses when the stalking event occurs—thus a photo is utilized for corroboration. Second, depending on the type of stalker, taking his photo may tend to slow his activities.

Always remember, however, that what works with one stalker may not work with another, and taking your particular stalker’s photo may cause a violent response. To date, each time a stalker we have investigated has been photographed by a victim, he has left the area without trying to take the camera away. That is not to say there won’t be a time when a stalker takes a camera away from the victim in the hopes of destroying evidence. That is why it is best to be working with a law enforcement professional as early into the stalking scenario as pos-

The people who tortured me, The Pearbourn Police, Patrick Roberson, Ardyce and Tom Rogers, Jack Webb, Mary Frances Worpila, Michele and Dennis Wise, Greg Hayden, Edward Robege and The Taylor Police Department assisted The Pearbourn Police in covering it up.

I'm just an average citizen who needs your help. I have a expressive language disability and this act of torture and the proof I have needs to be explained in front of you in an environment of real concern. I will come and see you next week - your the only hope I have. Currently I am being harrassed and intimidated everyday at Uotm, EBUS Stops.
The police are looking for a reason to approach me so they can find a reason to petition me.

Probably through a orchestrated event the stalkers will provide.

I may be willing to help the library staff which they already used stalkers or they will kick off a her providing someone a bus stop or store I frequent new police stop in offiice a reason to petition me and something along my usual route, superstore library bus stop's or on the bus.

They'll try to use conversations with people who are helping her to call social sources then they call police they tries this the other day.

tion and leaving the charging decision to somebody else. She could turn the case over to the state attorney general for a decision or to assign it to a special prosecutor.

Worthy admitted this week that letters and e-mails about the case are pouring into her office but insisted she will ignore the political calculus and unsolicited advice and simply do her job. Only one factor, she said, influences her decision — whether charges, if brought, could be proven beyond a reasonable doubt.

"I can't even fathom making a decision based on my own personal interests," Worthy said in an interview with The Detroit News.

Worthy announced Jan. 25 she had launched a criminal investigation into the conduct of Kilpatrick and his former chief of staff, Christine Beatty, after the media published excerpts of text messages exchanged between the two in 2002 and 2003. The messages appeared to contradict sworn testimony by Kilpatrick and Beatty at a police whistle-blower trial in 2007, where each denied they had a romantic affair and denied former Detroit police deputy chief Gary Brown had been fired.

Few observers accept the idea that Worthy can divorce politics from such a high-profile case.

"We're political animals," said Oakland County Prosecutor David Goreyca. "I think it's meritorious of her to make that statement," but "the decision can't be made in a political vacuum."

"As long as you have made a proper decision based on the evidence, you really can't worry about it," Kym Worthy said. "I'm just trying to get the hospitals open," DuSharon McPhail, general counsel, said. "She'll let the facts completely dictate it," Goreyca said.

She started in county office

Worthy, 51, has credentials in law and politics. She started as an undergrad at the University of Michigan and a law degree from the University of Notre Dame. Her dad was one of the first African-Americans to graduate from West Point Military Academy and Worthy says he instilled her with a strong work ethic and sense of moral purpose.

She began her career as an assistant county prosecutor in 1984 and rose to prominence prosecuting former Detroit Mayor Larry "Larry in" Bing.

"If he was any more of a perjurer charge than lying about his ethics, I would have been so happy," McPhail said. Worthy says that letters and e-mails about the case are pouring into her office.

A heart defibrillator — used to jump start a human heartbeat that has stopped — produces 360 joules per pulse, Zanotti said.

The defibrillator is 2,000 times more powerful, Zanotti said. "If defibrillators are safe, it's assumed Tazers are," he said.

Tazers have been extensively researched and medically evaluated.

There are no known medical problems associated with their use, Zanotti said. Nielsen agrees, saying he is unaware of any medical conditions that Tazers cause.

Most health issues associated with Tazers are due to people having no ability to catch themselves when they are falling down, Zanotti said. But these issues are secondary to the importance of apprehending suspects, he said.

To the contrary, Robert Owen of Crescent City had Thursday receiving treatment for heart problems that he said resulted from being shot with a Taser in March.

It is the fifth time he's been hospitalized since he was tasered in his Crescent City home by an officer from the Del Norte County Sheriff's Office.

"They need to get rid of them [Tasers] — I'm a prime example," Owen said.

It has affected his entire circulatory system and his body is in pain all the time, he said. "I don't want to see it happen to other people."

Owen is a former Marine and a 100 percent disabled veteran. He is concerned that Tazers are not being used in a lawful manner.

The officer made no attempt to subdue him before firing his Taser, he said. "I was just standing there."

The electric waves were deployed numerous times, Owen said. "You can let up anytime, you Nazi," Owen said he told the officer.

Crescent City Criminal Defense Attorney Jim Fallman is representing Owen in a lawsuit against Del Norte County and its Sheriff's office. "He has a serious medical condition," Fallman said of his client.

Robert Owen of Crescent City sits in a St. Joseph Hospital bed with heart problems he believes were caused by a Taser attack in March. Daniel Solomon/The Eureka Reporter

They used scripts to activate a Taser.

Since his service in Vietnam, he has suffered from Post Traumatic Stress Syndrome, a fatigued mental state associated with combat. He said that being shot with a Taser has "thrown" him right back into a mind-set filled with anxiety.

"My heart was fine before this happened to me," Owen said, adding he has medical records to prove it. Since March, he has had constant medical and psychiatric visits, he said.

Owen described himself as a medical mess. "The medications are helping, but it's stuff I never should have been on," he said.

A woman was tortured in Dearborn: The Dearborn Police not only knew about it but was an active participant in covering it up: when the victim reached out for help thru other agencies, the Dearborn Police conferenced with the Taylor Police and thru a staged incident the victim was petitioned into a psychiatric ward were she was given a deliberate false diagnosis to discredit the victim and top protect them against future litigation: a woman was tortured, why doesn't this mean anything to anyone:
TACTIC 1

Increase suggestibility and “soften up” the individual through specific hypnotic or other suggestibility-increasing techniques such as: Extended audio, visual, verbal, or tactile fixation drills. Excessive exact repetition of routine activities. Sleep restriction and/or Nutritional restriction.

TACTIC 2

Establish control over the person’s social environment, time and sources of social support by a system of often-excessive rewards and punishments. Social isolation is promoted. Contact with family and friends is abridged, as is contact with persons who do not share group-approved attitudes. Economic and other dependence on the group is fostered.

TACTIC 3

Prohibit disconfirming information and non-supporting opinions in group communication. Rules exist about permissible topics to discuss with outsiders. Communication is highly controlled. An “in-group” language is usually constructed.

TACTIC 4

Make the person re-evaluate the most central aspects of his or her experience of self and prior conduct in negative ways. Efforts are designed to destabilize and undermine the subject’s basic consciousness, reality awareness, world view, emotional control and defense mechanisms. The subject is guided to reinterpret his or her life’s history and adopt a new version of causality.

TACTIC 5

Create a sense of powerlessness by subjecting the person to intense and frequent actions and situations which undermine the person’s confidence in himself and his judgment.

TACTIC 6

Create strong aversive emotional arousal in the subject by use of nonphysical punishments such as intense humiliation, loss of privilege, social isolation, social status changes, intense guilt, anxiety, manipulation and other techniques.

TACTIC 7

Intimidate the person with the force of group-sanctioned secular psychological threats. For example, it may be suggested or implied that failure to adopt the approved attitude, belief or consequent behavior will lead to severe punishment or dire consequences such as physical or mental illness, the reappearance of a prior physical illness, drug dependence, economic collapse, social failure, divorce, disintegration, failure to find a mate, etc.

These tactics of psychological force are applied to such a severe degree that the individuals capacity to make informed or free choices becomes inhibited. The victims become unable to make the normal, wise or balanced decisions which they most likely or normally would have made, had they not been unknowingly manipulated by these coordinated technical processes. The cumulative effect of these processes can be an even more effective form of undue influence than pain, torture, drugs or the use of physical force and physical and legal threats.
Keep the information you gather on your stalker in a safe place. If possible, make copies and keep a copy in another location. Remember, some stalkers will enter their victims' homes and cars, and they have been known to steal the documentation you have accumulated.

As much as possible, corroborate this documentation with eyewitness accounts or photographs. Go out and buy a disposable camera to keep your own records. You might also want to consult with a law enforcement professional as early in the stalking scenario as possible.

Los Angeles, The Associated Press

With Britney Spears whisked out of the public spotlight Thursday and committed to a hospital psychiatric ward, it's now up to a team of professional caregivers — and possibly the legal system — to reverse her seemingly endless downward spiral.

Spears, accompanied by more than a dozen police officers, was taken to the UCLA Medical Center before dawn Thursday in what one officer said was an effort to "get help" for the troubled pop star.

It was her second 72-hour commitment in four weeks, though her previous stay lasted less than two days and was followed by more strange episodes that have accompanied her divorce and bruising child custody battle.

The law allows a person to be placed on an involuntary psychiatric hold for up to 72 hours if they are believed to be a danger to themselves or others. Spears' mother, Lynne Spears, was seen leaving the medical center's psychiatric hospital about 5:30 a.m. Asked if her daughter was all right, she replied, "Yeah."

Under the law, doctors may keep an individual under round-the-clock observation but may not medicate the person without his or her permission unless there appears to be grave danger, said Dr. Bruce Spring, assistant professor of clinical psychiatry at the University of Southern California.

"The hold is not a carte blanche for treatment," said Spring, who is not connected to Spears' case.

Spears' public emotional spiral began in November 2006 when she filed for divorce from Kevin Federline, the father of her infant sons, 1-year-old Jayden James and 2-year-old Sean Preston.

Neither Spears' attorney nor Federline's lawyer immediately returned calls for comment on her hospitalization. The pop star's spokeswoman declined to comment.

It was not immediately clear who initiated Spears' commitment process. The latest effort to get her help comes as various people in her life appear to be jockeying for influence, from her immediate family to two men who have recently surfaced.

One, Sam Lutfi, has described himself as Spears' manager and "very good frier." Earlier this week, Barbara Walters said on ABC's "The View" that Lutfi had contacted the veteran newswoman and told her that Spears saw a psychiatrist and "is starting some kind of treatment."

The other is Adnan Ghalib, a paparazzi photographer who recently announced that he is Spears' boyfriend. Soon after that announcement, Ghalib's wife of four years filed for a legal separation.

adulterous, or alcoholic environment, and who did not have enormous feelings of being "not OK," would find abusive behavior on the part of a spouse unacceptable at a conscious and unconscious level. It would not feel familiar and it would be avoided. That person would say "goodbye," leave, and congratulate himself for escaping before it was too late.

Manipulative Games: "It Didn't Happen" and "You're Crazy"

In abusive or dishonest relationships, one partner often attempts to control and manipulate the other by questioning the other partner's intelligence, the accuracy of her or his perceptions or memory, and sometimes even her or his sanity. Typically, this questioning takes the form of a series of games, which can be called, "You're Wrong," "It Wasn't Me," "It Didn't Happen That Way," "It Is All in Your Imagination," or "You're Crazy." These games are begun by the Parent, which demands that you respect its authority and denies your own perceptions, desires, or needs, as you are only a child and the Parent is the all-knowing deity that rules the family. Given the left brain's propensity to believe what it hears, it can often be persuaded that any feeling or awareness that contradicts what is being said should be ignored or dismissed.

When the event involving the ice cream was discussed with both Jean and Mark, he at first claimed to be unable to recall the incident. When Jean insisted and retold the story from start to finish, Mark began to argue that, when she had come home, she was acting strange and nervous and seemed upset. When he had begun to question her casually about her whereabouts she acted evasive, couldn't give him a straight answer, and started to become hysterical. He hadn't showed or slapped her; he was trying to calm her down and get a straight answer out of her. When he had tried to help her with the ice cream, it flapped open and the ice cream fell out:

Sure it splattered, and that made me mad. But sure as hell didn't hit her with it. How can you rub hard ice cream into someone's face? I don't know why she got so scared. It makes me wonder what's she trying to hide. I mean, maybe relationships between institutions of higher education and their neighbors are not automatically harmonious. As in the corporate world, some universities have attempted to weather the job uncertainty of existing employees, seeking to limit permanent new hires and replace them with temporary labor. The decrease in employment opportunities has contributed to an increased labor supply for certain types of low-skilled jobs. This has given universities the option of providing lower paying and less stable jobs to urban residents, often through outsourcing agencies, which may provide limited benefits and job security.

These circumstances reduce the overall buying power of residents, contributing to the closing of small businesses and deteriorated housing, in other words, declining property value. Some universities have seized upon these opportunities and bought significant properties. Such property acquisitions in poor urban areas can have a variety of effects, including redeveloped housing and new businesses; however, such purchases do not always benefit residents. Many would argue that they rarely do. Credibility fueled by universities has tended to displace neighborhood residents and make it increasingly clear to these communities that they are unwanted in their own backyards. Universities have poured funding into private police forces, seeking to protect students from the criminal behavior of urban residents. Such dynamics lead to tension between universities and their surrounding communities manifested in crime, protest, and overall resentment.

Many major research universities such as Yale, Columbia, the University of Southern California, the University of Chicago, and the University of Pennsylvania, among others, sit in close proximity to poor urban neighborhoods. This is common as well for public urban universities, historically black colleges and universities, and community colleges. The contrast, however, is greater at the major research universities, where the student bodies are significantly distinct from the local residents and the university resources far outstrip local ones. The previously popular defensive strategy taken by the academy in relation to their surrounding neighborhoods only fanned flames of resentment among the locals.

A recent article by Gurwitt offers a similar analysis to Benson and Harry’s, suggesting that universities and colleges in such situations are motivated by an “ultramaintainence” that if they do not act to improve local conditions, then they could go down with the neighborhood. If a neighborhood is deemed “unsanitary” or “deteriorated,” a university or college might lose students and especially faculty who are concerned about setting up roots, buying homes, and sending their children to school. Current urban conditions consequently have influenced the recent efforts at community partnerships in higher education. While the concept of community outreach among institutions of higher education is not new, recent socioeconomic circumstances have spawned a new angle — and interest — in approaches to partnerships.

LEASE DEPOSIT

This receipt acknowledges that I, ________________________, have placed a deposit in the amount of $325.00 on dwelling unit #3, located in Woodland Apartments (Lessor), Springfield, Tennessee. The deposit will hold this unit for me for a period of two weeks.

Lessor agrees not to show and/or lease the unit to other prospective lessees for this two week period. If, for any reason, I decide not to sign a lease commencing within this two week period to rent the above-mentioned dwelling unit, I will forfeit the deposit in the amount stated above as a termination fee. Such fee is to compensate Lessor for its time and efforts in verifying information submitted on my application and for any lost time it may have, or could have, incurred by holding the unit off the market. The termination fee will not be prorated.

If Lessor decides not to lease the unit to Lessee for any reason, other than my submitting false information on my application, my entire deposit will be returned to me within thirty days.
